

— A Place to Rest, Surf, and Remember —

San Juan, La Union, known as the "Surfing Capital of the Northern Philippines". Both Filipinos and foreigners visit because it provides a great relaxation, same goes for surfing experience for experts and beginners. People who are uninterested in riding the waves can also do other things. It can be riding different water activities, food adventure, sightseeing, going to festivals, and many more.

San Juan, La Union is more than a surfing spot for many people just like myself and my family. It's like other places where memories and experiences are made. With the stunning beaches of San Juan, whether we walk alone by the seashore or spend time with the people we love, where we can talk over freely or composed topics that make us grow more with the people we know, watching the beauty of the sunset and sunrise where we can reflect and be grateful for the peaceful life that we have, the thrill when riding the waves or just relaxing by the sea, gives us the strength and the healing that we need.

Trying the food and exploring their rich culture also brings excitement and new experience while we enjoy our vacation. Near San Juan, there are still many places that we can add to our itinerary when visiting. The first one is Baluarte Watchtower, which, as stated by La Union Tayo!, the Watchtower facing the West Philippine Sea is 400 years old and was built during the Spanish period. This can be found in Barangay Victoria, the Municipality of Luna. The next one is Ma-Cho Temple, which is said to be the first Taoist temple in the country, and it's located in San Fernando downtown. The Poro Point Lighthouse, which is also located in San Fernando, La Union just like Ma-Cho Temple. It is said the tower itself stands 27 feet high, but according to La Union Tayo!, the lighthouse is rarely used because it has no lantern, but still flashes a white light which means the lighthouse still functions.

The experience that we get through traveling involves a lot of circumstances. When we look really think about it, it's fun and adventures. Unexpected events can happen, we get to meet new people, we get to reflect and more. That is why we should be grateful for being able to travel, relax, and be ourselves as we get to see the beauty of the places that we go to alone or with the people that we love.
